In the Garden of Iden is an excellent sci-fi novel that reads, for the most part, like historical fiction. There's a definite cross-over appeal here for fans of Tudor-era romance novels. Actually, it reminded me quite strongly of Judith Merkle Riley's books with some time travel/mechanical gadgets thrown in.

In Lola Plants a Garden by Anna McQuinn and Rosalind Beardshaw a young girl plans and plants a flower garden, with her mother's help. When the flowers have bloomed she invites her friends over for a garden party. I particularly like that it shows Lola going to the library to do research to plan her garden and choose what kind of flowers she plants.
