ourselves to Him as a slave does to a master.

This new life is costly.

It will cost us the complete rejection of our old life. Once you count the cost, then you have to decide whether you are really
willing to do what it takes to follow through.

counting costs he used analogies that ring as true today as they did two millennia ago. But, Jesus was less concerned about building projects or battle plans than he was about the spiritual costs of being a disciple. At the heart of this passage is the question: What does the Lord require of me?

Ibrahim counted the cost of Christianity and she was able to stand. I can tell you before the wreck, I don't know that I could have withstood that kind of pressure. I would have somehow justified it in my mind that Oh surely God would understand, and I would have been wrong. But when we're asked and there is a cost to it, can we stand?
