Life Class Life Class lives up to the excellence and economic elegance of Pat Barker's previous offerings. Winner of the Booker Prize for fiction, Barker is a marvelous chronicler of WW1 England. While not a part of the Regeneration Trilogy, Life Class covers the same time period - just before and during the early part of the "war to end all wars."

Summary and reviews of Life Class by Pat Barker

In Life Class, Pat Barker's eleventh novel, the British author returns to the troubling imagery of World War I. It takes a while for Barker to reach the front—the first half of the novel is set in and around London's Slade School of Fine Art. Here, Paul Tarrant (working-class and moody) and Elinor Brooke (bourgeois and wily) attend life-drawing classes, drink themselves silly in the ...

Pat Barker - Wikipedia

LIFE CLASS begins with a glimpse over the shoulder of Paul Tarrant, a student at the famous London art school, the Slade. He is struggling to draw a nude model (you know it's nearly 100 years ago because the women and men have separate sessions), awash in feelings familiar to anybody who attempts art: self-doubt, frustration and a looming fear of professorial comments that nail a wrongness ...
