Levinovitz sees himself as an enlightened soul, one who knows that the best future for humanity and nature must be built on dialogue and evidence, "not taboos and zealotry.". Those who "wrap their rhetoric in the mantle of 'what's natural,' he says, tend to be propagandists, bigots, demagogues, and marketers.".

Book review: "Natural" asks the wrong question | CFACT

Good book, gives hope for natural solutions and is well written. Material would be dated except for the fact that not much has changed in the realm of meds for HBP and the way the probable cause of the condition would be true at any time. The ideas are well explained without hype. 10 people found this helpful
