The Bird's Nest is a 1954 novel by Shirley Jackson. The plot concerns a young woman, Elizabeth Richmond, with multiple personality disorder.

The Bird's Nest (novel) - Wikipedia

Originally published in 1954, The Bird's Nest is Shirley Jackson's well-regarded tale of a young woman suffering from multiple personality disorder. There are four separate personalities within this girl (referred to by her treating physician as "Miss R."): timid, colorless Elizabeth, cloyingly sweet Beth, hyperactive prankster Betsy, and vena, greedy Bess.

The Bird's Nest by Shirley Jackson - Goodreads

Shirley Jackson's best known works - The Lottery, The Haunting of Hill House and We Have Always Lived at the Castle - have placed her oeuvre firmly within the Gothic Horror genre. However her writing is more subtle than that label suggests and The Bird's Nest highlights the difficulty in pigeon-holing her work and emphasises a vein of ice-cold humour that often runs through her writing.

I have always been interested in "psychological" novels, and nothing beats Shirley Jackson. I prefer her tales like The Haunting of Hill House and We Have Always Lived in the Castle, but The Birds Nest is also a favorite. I wanted to smack the main character often, and the doctor was kind of pompous, and the Aunt also had her mental problems.
