Moral imagination, according to philosopher Mark Johnson, means envisioning the full range of possibilities in a particular situation in order to solve an ethical challenge. Johnson emphasizes that acting morally often requires more than just strength of character. For example, moral action requires empathy and the awareness to discern what is morally relevant in a [...]

Eva Brann, the legendary tutor at St. John's in Annapolis, states that the moral imagination "is the representation to oneself of concretely visualized human conditions and consequences." She adds that it "is fed by remembered experience, be it worldly or fictive, and that means, in turn, that it is past-nurtured" (ibid.).
