The fear response is almost entirely autonomic: We don't consciously trigger it or even know what's going on until it has run its course. Because cells in the brain are constantly transferring information and triggering responses, there are dozens of areas of the brain at least peripherally involved in fear.

How Fear Works | HowStuffWorks

Fear is thus triggered by an internal forecast. Sound is a primitive trigger of fear and the roar of a lion or the scream of a terrified child can send shivers down your spine. The sound of danger or the fear of others implies an imminent threat and so fear is triggered to elicit a desire for escape and survival.

No one likes fear. Fear is one of the most powerful emotions that our minds can create. It's so powerful that can hinder your ability to think, cause your voice to quiver when you speak and even force a physical reaction such as shaking or immobility. On the most basic level, fear is good. It's your body alerting you that you're in danger. Unfortunately, our minds confuse physical danger (such ...
